Study finds deeper gravity hole beneath Antarctica

Scientists have identified a gravity hole beneath Antarctica that is deeper than the well-known Indian Ocean Geoid Low. The study in Scientific Reports used a nonhydrostatic geoid to map Earth's gravity, revealing that the Antarctic Geoid Low has existed for at least 70 million years and may have influenced the formation of Antarctica's ice sheets. Full Story: Eos (3/26)